Parking Notice Received

Dear Mr. Kovaleski,

Thank you for the opportunity to speak with you regarding your inquiry about two parking notices (1000388742 & 1000340379) that were issued at two different parking lots in Denver Colorado. After carefully researching each incident separately, it was determined the notices were issued correctly. In both cases, the customer failed to comply with the lot rules by failing to place their receipt face up on the dashboard. At the time the notices were issued, the enforcement employee had no way to verify payment was made. The lot rules are posted on each lot. Also, the language on the receipt clearly states "Display Receipt on Dash."

As you may know, private parking companies operate private parking lots in major cities, such as Denver. The surface lots which are the subject of your inquiry are operated on an honor system; these lots are not staffed but are set up with payment machines/honor boxes, and parking customers are expected to pay if they park in these lots. Unfortunately, many parking customers do not pay or comply with the other required terms to park on a lot. Also, some parking customers even attempt to defraud the parking companies by creating false paid receipts and bank statements, false monthly parking permits, and sharing payment receipts and monthly permits. This is a significant and substantial problem for all parking companies that operate surface parking lots.

Many of these private parking companies have retained Parking Revenue Recovery Services, Inc. ("PRRS") to provide parking enforcement services in Denver, including monitoring the parking companies' lots and issuing parking notices to customers/vehicles who violate the terms and conditions for parking on their lots.

As you may also know, property owners have the right to protect their property from trespassers. Specifically, private parking companies, as the owners/authorized managers of these private parking lots, have the right to establish terms and conditions under which a customer is permitted to park their vehicle or use the parking lot. A customer is allowed to use the parking lot only if they fully comply with all of the terms and conditions established by the parking company. If a parking customer does not fully comply with the terms and conditions, they are trespassing.

In the spirit of resolving the situation brought to us by you, PRRS has voided both notices and refunded the amount paid by one of the customers. It's important to highlight that the notices were issued correctly and the customer was required to pay the additional fees as posted on the lot.

Should you have any questions related to this situation, please contact me directly.

Sincerely,

Parking Revenue Recovery Services, Inc.
